

CONTEMPLATIVE STUDIES

The Contemplative Studies minor is broadly interdisciplinary, incorporating coursework in the humanities, arts, and sciences to explore the theory, practice, history, and scientific study of diverse contemplative traditions. In addition to the intellectual study of these topics, students train in the daily application of secularized contemplative techniques. Critical reflection on subjective experience is a key component, and research as well as creative expression are encouraged and supported.

The minor offers students a foundation in four primary areas:

- 1) the theory of contemplation across traditions and history
- 2) the application of contemplation in various human endeavors, including philosophy, religion, art, and performance
- 3) the scientific study of meditation, its cutting-edge technologies, and the modes of gathering quantifiable psychological data to document its effects on the brain and well-being
- 4) significant training and experience in contemplative practice towards the development of concentration, empathy, stress-reduction, creativity, etc.
